PENSACOLA CAMPAIGN OPENS TODAY

Now That Carnival is Over Tuberculosis Fight Will Be Waged.

PROGRAM TODAY IS AN EXTENDED ONE, AND CALLS FOR MANY LECTURES BY DR. RUTZAHN. MANY VISITED HEADQUARTERS DURING YESTERDAY.

WEDNESDAY'S PROGRAM.
"Ministers' Day."
"Women's Club and Society Day."
"Pensacola Day."
Exhibition open all day free of charge.
Addresses today before colored schools.
Pensacola campaign begins today.
Question conferences and stereopticon addresses.
2:30 p. m. conference of ministers.
Distribution of announcements by Pensacola Electric Co.
Publicity in towns along L. & N. R. R. by local agents.
Inauguration of noonday shop campaign under auspices of Y. M. C. A.
Beginning of public school visitation of exhibition.
4 p. m. and 8 p. m.—Special addresses, followed by question drawer.
8:30 p. m. conference of women's clubs and societies.

"After the snow is over" and "after the carnival is past" the tuberculosis exhibition campaign begins in real earnest. More than seven hundred visitors were recorded each of the carnival days, including many from other cities and other states.

Today begins the effort to secure the interest and the presence of the men and women who live in Pensacola. There will also begin another effort to bring again to the city the physicians and public spirited citizens of the leading towns up and down the line of the L. & N., as well as along the shore throughout Pensacola territory.

Rabbi Jacob D. Schwarz is writing to all Hebrew congregations in the state inviting the presence of delegations to the exhibition in this city, and urging co-operation in the state campaign.

This afternoon the ministers will gather to examine some special social welfare exhibits, and at the same time to arrange for "Church Day" at the exhibition. At the prayer meeting services of the churches reference will be made in some cases to the exhibition and announcement be made of day and hour for the congregation to meet at 23 East Garden.

Very curiously the tuberculosis exhibition campaign is hampered by difficulties growing out of local business demands which have made it impossible to secure enough of typewriters for office use. During Monday and Tuesday the telegraph and long distance phone have been used in trying to get two additional machines from Jacksonville, Mobile or Montgomery. It is now hoped that the added machines will arrive at noon today. The mails are not carrying nearly all of the matter which needs to go out concerning the local effort, in addition to the state campaign which centers here at Pensacola.

Division Passenger Agent J. W. Lorton has taken up the promotion of exhibition interest all along the line. "Mr. Lorton has written to L. and N. agents calling attention to the exhibition as a "very important matter, and one which all of the citizens of Florida should take the opportunity of availing themselves of." The agents will place the red and yellow posters and distribute the four-page leaflets.

Rev. Chas. P. Hall of the Universalist church has very kindly agreed to invite other Universalist congregations of Florida to be represented at Pensacola during the exhibition period.

In the United States 150,000 people die every year from consumption—400 every day—more than were killed in battle during the entire four years of the civil war. All the infectious diseases combined do not cause nearly so many deaths.

In Pensacola there were 47 deaths from tuberculosis last year—the greatest single cause of death.

Consumption kills people in the prime of life when they should be useful citizens and when they can least be spared by their families. One-half the total deaths from consumption occur between the ages of twenty and forty.

Consumption can be prevented, but the national and local organizations cannot win the battle without the help of all citizens of every age and condition.

How to help will be demonstrated at the American Tuberculosis exhibition which illustrates the new Golden Rule—
Don't give consumption to others and don't let others give it to you.
This is entirely possible—if
All the people will only learn and practice a few simple rules about consumption. Then this disease would every year cause fewer and fewer deaths.

Consumption is not inherited but is spread chiefly through the germ or seed contained in the sputum (spit) or moist particles coming from the throat and lungs of the consumptive. Consumption is conveyed to well people largely by consumptives who spit carelessly, or who are not cleanly about their persons.

There is no danger in the breath of a consumptive, or being near him.
The surest prevention is to live right, because the perfectly healthy body is not subject to the disease.
Consumption can be cured in its early stages—sometimes even when more advanced. The exhibition will show how. IT CAN NOT BE DONE BY MEANS OF PATENT MEDICINES.
For the sake of self and friends and city you are urged to visit the exhibition and ask others to do the same.

Baby Hands

turies which followed, and he therefore vowed that the person setting him at liberty would be immediately put to death. The tactful fisherman, however, had the forethought to trick him into returning to the spot, where upon he affixed the seal of Solomon again, and all was well!

Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp.—No. 4.
Aladdin, with his wonderful lamp, was faithfully shown in the float of the pageant, the "wonderful lamp" having been in evidence, which he briskly rubbed from time to time, in evident anticipation, of course, of awakening the genie which had, according to the tales, formed the habit of appearing with a puff of wind and a sound like thunder wherever the operation was performed. The unusual and exciting experiences of Aladdin and his particular piece of bric-a-brac are familiar to all lovers of fairy tales.

Sinbad the Sailor.—No. 5.
Sinbad, the sailor of numerous and hair-raising experiences was the hero of the fifth float, and could be seen in the act of alighting, with his companions, upon one of the islands upon which he was stranded in the course of his seven voyages. Great green snakes with inquisitive tongues peered at him from the grasses, and large luscious looking melons were in great profusion, which were evidently to form the chief sustenance of Sinbad and his men during this particular sojourn.

The float was one of the most striking of the series.

Noureddin.—No. 6.
The story of Noureddin, the son of an Egyptian sultan, was interwoven in a pretty scheme for the float bearing his name, his son, Bedreddin, in turn, having appeared with a basket in the guise of a pastry cook, an estate into which he fell, on account of a serious turn of circumstances.

Noureddin, who died a good Mussulman very early in the story, gave his belongings intact to his son, who somehow wandered away from his land and his people, through the influence of a genii and found himself half dressed one morning at the gates of a mighty city, whither he had been conveyed during the night, through the same evil genius.

The citizens, according to the story, appeared to resent his scant attire seriously, and he was forced to flee to the shop of a friendly pastry cook, where through the exercise of his peculiar culinary talents, he finally succeeded in finding track of his people. He was to be seen last night with his basket of cream tarts, on his arm, the merits of which were familiar to one of his family who ate of his wares, and through which he was finally restored to his native dignity.

The Barber.—No. 7.
The barber of Arabian Nights fame, who, with a band of highwaymen, was about to be put to death by the caliph for having been connected with a series of depredations which had occurred from time to time throughout the country, and who, by the coolness of his manner and his failure to beg for mercy excited the admiration and pity of the sultan, was depicted in the seventh float, his head being dangerously near the huge knife wielded by the blood thirsty caliph. The barber and the stories told of his six brothers form an interesting series within the Arabian Nights serial.

Hassan of Beslora.
"Hassan of Beslora" proved the hero of the eighth float, which, with its six mystical figures, was one of the most interesting of the entire float. The interesting and unusual character so well known to fiction readers, appeared in all his regal glory with his attendants, the whole having been effective in its barbaric splendor.

Forty Thieves.—No. 9.
Ali Baba, it will be recalled, was a poor Persian, who one day, amidst his wood cutting in the forest, saw forty armed thieves approaching. He quickly secreted himself, and saw their leader approach a large cave and heard him utter the words "open sesame."

The door in the rock immediately flew open, and the men went in. Soon they came out and drove away, leaving Ali Baba to consider the things he had seen.

Overcome with curiosity, he repeated the words and soon found himself in a cavern surrounded by the immense plunder of the highwaymen. He finally began using the gold himself, and after various experiences, found himself the object of suspicion upon the part of the captain of the band.

The wily captain laid a trap to catch Ali Baba, which consisted of his presenting himself as an oil merchant, his stock which he carried with him, having consisted of 39 large jars of "oil." When the family of Ali Baba had retired for the night, the captain opened the jars, each of which had contained one of his men, who were to fall upon the inmates of the unsuspecting household and slay them.

A servant, however, had fortunately discovered the ruse in time, and had poured boiling oil into each receptacle, thus easily killing the entire band. The large oil receptacles were seen on the floats last night, with Ali Baba looking on enthusiastically while the servant performed her part in the quiet little tragedy.

The Enchanted Horse.—No. 10.
A horse which, when the correct peg was manipulated, could ascend from the earth and bear its rider in any direction which he saw fit to go was presented to a certain Persian king, by a lowly Indian, who, in return for the wonderful piece of mechanism, demanded the king's daughter in marriage.

But the lady's brother, the Prince Prouz Schah, upon hearing the request, sprang angrily upon the saddle of the mysterious horse and before he had learned its merits and demerits, was being borne aloft in the clouds. Meantime, he rescued a beautiful princess, and learned to steer the horse in the bargain, and returned to his court in pomp and brilliancy indeed.

The magic horse appeared on the float, with his dauntless rider soaring into the clouds, the effect having been startling and extraordinary.

Ganem.—No. 11.
Ganem, surnamed "Love's slave," appeared on the eleventh float, seated in a chair over which a regal canopy had been erected. As befitting a young man of wealth, he appeared very much at leisure, with willing servants at his command, and the effect was very good indeed.

Ganem had the misfortune to fall asleep among the tombs one night, and thoughtlessly dug up an iron chest which he discovered to be conveniently buried under the palm tree in which he was roosting for the night. Upon opening the chest, great was his surprise to behold a young and beautiful woman, apparently dead but beautifully dressed.

Hereseduced her, only to find that she had been drugged by Zobeide, a jealous wife of the reigning caliph, whose intention it had been to make her one of his many wives. Ganem fell desperately in love with the lady, the two were finally detected by the caliph, who caused great hardships indeed to befall the lovers, finally regretting his harshness, however, and restoring the lovely woman to Ganem.

Ibrahim and Genie.—No. 12.
The Ibrahim and Genie float, which was one of the most splendid floats in the parade, represented the principals surrounded by a group of four, the coloring having been in the delicate shades, chosen with a view to their successful illumination. The two famous characters bowed and smiled at the spectators, their costumes having been particularly handsome.

About Mohammed the Lazy.—No. 13.
About Mohammed the Lazy gracefully reclined upon a couch last night, and looked and acted fairly comfortable from his perch on his rather elaborate float. About had somehow inoculated the germ known to modern science as "laziness," and he appeared in his favorite position, evidently making a bold stab at the "rest cure." He was enthusiastically admired, and his pose was perfect.

The False Caliph.—No. 14.
The last of the pageant represented the False Caliph and two attendant figures, his royal ribs having been shown in all his false pose and mischief making propensity as he glowered about at the crowds who watched him delightedly. This particular caliph, unlike most of the commanders of the faithful, had not remained true to his trust, and by his depredations and his painful unreliability of temper had been particularly devastating on the weal of his country, and the necks of his people. One of the first bills brought to him for his signature has to do with a franchise grab and it is prompted by the uncle of the girl with whom he is in love. It looks to the new mayor as if his refusal would cost him all the friends of his family, but after pursuing the rough road, in the end he wins his sweetheart and demonstrates that honesty always pays. The company to be seen here is said to be exceptionally strong, while the production is complete in every detail. Matinee and night performances.

Attention, W. O. W.
All members of Hickory Camp No. 21, W. O. W., are requested to meet at their hall on Wednesday afternoon at 2:15 to attend the funeral of Sovereign Fritz Mertins' son. Live Oak Camp, Woodman Circle, and all visiting sovereigns are cordially invited. By request of CHAS. D. CROOKE, C. C.

The Man of the Hour.
At the opera house Saturday, March 6th, William A. Brady and Joseph R. Gismar's production, "The Man of the Hour," will be the attraction, and as the theatregoers have heard and read so much of this great play there is no doubt standing-room will be at a premium. While George Broadhurst, the playwright, has taken for his theme certain conditions which exist in every large city, still there is said to be interwoven in "The Man of the Hour" a delightful love story. The plot, in brief, concerns a young millionaire who has been refused by his sweetheart because he has "done nothing worthy." He then enters politics and is elected mayor of his city. After assuming the duties of the office he manfully refuses to bow to the political boss. One of the first bills brought to him for his signature has to do with a franchise grab and it is prompted by the uncle of the girl with whom he is in love. It looks to the new mayor as if his refusal would cost him all the friends of his family, but after pursuing the rough road, in the end he wins his sweetheart and demonstrates that honesty always pays. The company to be seen here is said to be exceptionally strong, while the production is complete in every detail. Matinee and night performances.

royal party then formed at the front of the stage, when the lights disappeared for an instant, and then, when the spot-light again found Priscus, the familiar and classic features of Dr. Mallory Kennedy were revealed. The members of the court then enjoyed the stately minuet which is yearly held by Priscus, the reception of all his subjects having followed.

The coronation ball proved the finale, which was later resumed at the Ocala Club, where the royal party and many of the most loyal subjects of the merry monarch made merry until the wee sma' hours of today.
